6. Teaching

Through my academic posts in Greece and the UK, I have been involved and gained experience in teaching both undergraduate and postgraduate medical students and young doctors or psychiatrists. Although my teaching experience is mainly from my Greek post I have also had the opportunity to gain valuable experience in teaching postgraduate students in the UK as well. More specifically:

A. In Greece, I have:

Regularly taught in years 5 and 6 of the medical students curriculum.

- Regularly examined Medical students, as part of their clinical assessment and finals as well as regularly written and marked exam questions.
- Taught on various postgraduate courses organized by the Department of Psychiatry of the University of Ioannina.
- Regularly taught on the MSc in health management, organized by the Greek Open University.

B. In the UK, I have:

- Regularly taught on the Basic Epidemiology short course organized by the Department of Social Medicine of the University of Bristol. My one-hour lecture was on causal inference and I have taught for five consecutive years.
- I have taught on the critical appraisal course organized by the Academic Unit of Psychiatry in 2003 and 2005.
